Arising from research in the ESRC Sustainable Care: connecting people and systems programme, this new book series will provide novel, interdisciplinary and internationally informed contributions to understanding care systems, care work and care relationships. Contributions are based on studies conducted in the UK, with international partners studying linked topics in their own countries.

The series will focus on 'sustainable care', a concept which contributors will theorise in new and distinctive ways. It will make an innovative and distinctive contribution to understandings of future care challenges and how care arrangements could be made more sustainable in the future.

The series will develop and critically engage with key contemporary debates about:

- care infrastructure;
- divisions of caring labour and the political economy of care;
- care ethics, rights, recognition and values;
- care technologies and human-technological interactions;
- and care relations in intergenerational, emotional, community and familial contexts.

Key themes and subject areas will include:

- social and welfare policy and systems;
- family and social gerontology;
- ageing and disability studies;
- employment and workforce organisation;
- diversity (incl. gender and ethnicity);
- migration and mobility;
- technology studies.

Providing new empirical, conceptual and methodological research, in both scholarly and accessible forms, this series will become required reading internationally for scholars, policymakers, practitioners and citizens interested in care.
