Health and Social Care

Health divides

Where you live can kill you

Clare Bambra, Newcastle University

“Crucial insights from a new wave of political epidemiology that will change the way you think about health and illness.”

Professor Jason Beckfield, Harvard University

Revealing gaps in life expectancy of up to 25 years between places just a few miles apart, Clare Bambra examines the social, environmental, economic and political causes of health inequalities, how they have evolved over time and what they are like today.

Healthcare in transition

Understanding key ideas and tensions in contemporary health policy

Alan Cribb, King’s College London

Health policy thinking must change. This book explores the fundamental currents and tensions that lie behind recent trends such as shared decision-making, co-production, and personalisation. Its arguments will help fuel a shift away from a ‘delivery’ model towards a more deliberative model of healthcare.

Dementia and human rights

Suzanne Cahill, Dementia Services Information and Development Centre

A human rights lens has not to date been fully applied to interrogate the lived experience and policy response to dementia. Launching the debate into new and exciting territory, the book argues that people living with dementia come within the UN Convention on the Rights of People with Disability and therefore have full access to all the rights enshrined in it.

Disability and the welfare state in Britain

Changes in perception and policy 1948–79

Jameel Hampton

“Shows for the first time how disabled people, neglected by the post-war welfare state, changed things from the 1960s by campaigning, achieving inclusive reforms in the 1970s.” Patricia Thane, Kings College London

The British Welfare State initially seemed to promise welfare for all, but excluded millions of disabled people. This book examines attempts in the subsequent three decades to reverse this exclusion.
