

Studies in Social Harm

Series Editors: Christina Pantazis, University of Bristol, UK and Simon Pemberton, University of Birmingham, UK

"This series considers what matters most. Our value system is out of kilter. We imprison people, mostly the poorest, often for committing minor crimes, including not being able to pay back debts. We frequently laud those who can commit the most harm as wealth creators. Now is the right time for a focus on who is harmed most, how and why."

Danny Dorling, University of Oxford

Social harm is an emerging field of study which contributes to contemporary social and political debate. This exciting series moves the debate towards a holistic approach that seeks to understand the production of harm within contemporary society.

This is a systematic and critical discussion of the nature of environmental harm from an eco-justice perspective, challenging conventional criminological definitions of environmental harm.

Call for proposals

Proposals which represent cutting edge research in the area of social harm and that investigate harms which are dominating contemporary social and political debates are welcome. Books should:

- offer an inter-disciplinary and multi-disciplinary approach to issues in order to provide a fresh and comprehensive perspective;
- combine theory and empirical research in the investigation of harms;
- appeal to an international audience.
