

Law, Society, Policy

Series Editor: Rosie Harding, University of Birmingham

This series offers an outlet for high-quality socio-legal research monographs and edited collections with the potential for policy impact.

Cutting across the traditional divides of legal scholarship, Law, Society, Policy offers an interdisciplinary, policy-engaged approach to socio-legal research which explores law in its social and political contexts, with a particular focus on how regulatory frameworks shape everyday life.

The series takes an explicitly society-first view of socio-legal studies, with a focus on the ways that law shapes social life and the constitutive nature of law and society.
