

Transnational Administration and Global Policy

Series Editors: Kim Moloney, Hamad Bin Khalifa University, Qatar, Michael W. Bauer, European University Institute, Italy and Meng-Hsuan Chou, Nanyang Technological University, Singapore

This series explains and contributes to theorizing and the institutionalization of global governance structures and processes by examining actors and ideas permeating, shaping and critically engaging in these developments.

Publications in this series arise from multiple disciplines in the social and behavioural sciences, various actors (public, private, public-private, corporate, non-profit), multiple perspectives (across all governance levels and sectors) and several theoretical and methodological foci.

The books in this series are strongly tied together by their shared understanding that administrative studies, policy creation and its implementation are inseparable from both broader global trends and the actors engaging global governance spaces.

Call for proposals

The series showcases work that:

- challenges conventional disciplinary assumptions about the relationship between the governing and the governed;
- contributes to the argument that the prior administrative sovereignty of the world's states is being eroded as global governance actors find new channels for cooperation and information sharing;
- considers the linkages with one or more of the following: transnational administration, international public administration, international administrative law, global administrative law, transnationalization of civil society and global public policy;
- advances our collective knowledge on the transformation of today's regional and global governance spaces.
