Research in Rural Crime

Series Editors: Alistair Harkness, University of New England in New South Wales, Australia and Jessica Peterson, Southern Oregon University, US

Myths about peaceful, crime-free areas beyond the cityscape persist, but in fact rural crime is multi-faceted, raising new policy predicaments about policing and security governance. Filling a gap in the discipline, the Research in Rural Crime series, provides an outlet for original, cutting-edge research in this emergent criminological subfield.

This edited collection provides an innovative analysis of patterns of gender-based violence (GBV) in rural communities in addition to GBV education and prevention. It concludes with best practices to positively affect the lives of survivors.

In this first book in the Research in Rural Crime series, experts in rural criminology draw from theories of modernity, feminism, climate change, left realism and globalisation in a thought-provoking collection of essays.

Call for proposals

We welcome monograph-length titles that present pioneering interdisciplinary and comparative rural criminological perspectives. Titles will be theoretically and conceptually driven, empirical or adopting mixed-methods approaches, and topics will focus on regional, rural and remote parts of the globe that are often overlooked in criminological works.
