

Gender, Sexuality and Global Politics

Series Editors: Ali Bilgic, Loughborough University, UK, Synne L. Dyvik, University of Sussex, UK, Gunhild Hoogensen Gjørsv, UiT The Arctic University of Norway, Thomas Gregory, The University of Auckland, New Zealand and Swati Parashar, University of Gothenburg, Sweden

Expanding the boundaries of international relations, this series reflects on politics globally with innovative and transdisciplinary perspectives.

With a focus on feminist, lesbian, gay, bisexual, trans and queer activism, the series will critically examine existing hierarchies, practices and power relations in global politics, investigating the often violent effects of these on different peoples, geographies and histories. In doing so, it will enable new ways of thinking about and doing politics globally beyond the exclusionary and oppressing dichotomies that have come to dominate this field.

Call for proposals

The series editors welcome proposals that address:

- feminist theory: research that challenges the traditional scope of global politics through feminist, non-hegemonic perspectives, interrogating dominant and hierarchical discourses;
- queer theory: work that broadens the analyses of IR through the exploration of gay, lesbian, bisexual, and trans narratives;
- transdisciplinary and intersectional research: diverse work that is interdisciplinary and intersectional by nature;
- transformative and critical approaches: innovative research that reimagines the epistemological and ontological frameworks of IR, through methods that reconceptualize the practice and future of global politics;
- non-Western and post-colonial theory: research that decenters existing theorising in IR and explores non-Western perspectives and approaches, particularly from the Global South.
