Making policy move
Towards a politics of translation and assemblage
John Clarke, Open University, Dave Bainton and Noémi Lendvai, University of Bristol and Paul Stubbs, Institute of Economics, Zagreb

“Deeply collaborative and intellectually generous, this book exemplifies how we might approach policy otherwise.” Professor Wendy Larner, University of Bristol

Responding to increasing interest in the movement of policies between places, sites and settings, this timely book, argues that treating policy’s movement as an active process of ‘translation’, is of critical importance for studying policy.

Arguments for giving everyone some money

101 reasons for a Citizen's Income

Malcolm Torry, Citizen’s Income Trust

For anyone new to the subject of Citizen’s Income, or who wants to introduce friends, colleagues or relatives to the idea, this valuable guide will be essential reading. Drawing on arguments detailed in Money for Everyone (Policy Press, 2013), it offers a convincing case for a Citizen’s Income and a much needed resource for all interested in the future of welfare in the UK.

Global economic crisis and the new politics of welfare

Edited by Kevin Farnworth and Zoë Irving, University of York

The 2008 global economic crisis has led to a new age of austerity, based more on politics than economics, which threatens to undermine the very foundations of the welfare state. However, as resistance to the logic of austerity grows, this important book, the second of a three-book series, argues that there is still room for optimism.

The battle of the bedroom tax

Dave Cowan and Alex Marsh, University of Bristol

The ‘bedroom tax’ is one of the most high-profile and contentious of the UK Coalition Government’s welfare reform policies. In this topical book the authors use the ‘bedroom tax’ as a rich case study through which to explore a range of wider debates including understandings of the ‘social’ in social housing, the politics and policy of poverty, and social security law, making it a valuable reference for practitioners and policy-makers, lawyers and academics.

New philanthropy and social justice

Behrooz Morvaridi, University of Bradford

Over the last two decades individual capitalists and private corporations have become increasingly involved in philanthropy, often through foundations targeted at helping to reduce social problems associated with poverty, disease and food insecurity. This important book questions the political and ideological reasons behind rich individuals and large companies choosing to engage in poverty reduction through philanthropy, asking whether it offers a long term solution or just a short term sticking plaster.

Political (dis)engagement

Nathan Manning, University of York

In what ways is the meaning and practice of politics changing? Why might so many people feel dissatisfied and disaffected with electoral politics? In this important book academics from a range of disciplines join with political activists to explore the meaning of politics and citizenship in contemporary society and the current forms of political (dis)engagement, providing a timely interdisciplinary dialogue and interrogation of contemporary political practices.

Understanding street-level bureaucracy
Edited by Peter Hupe, Erasmus University Rotterdam, Michael Hill, University of Newcastle and Aurélien Buffat, University of Lausanne
Understanding street-level bureaucracy gathers internationally acclaimed scholars to provide a state of the art account of theory and research on modern street-level bureaucracy, filling an important gap in the literature on public policy delivery and making it a valuable text for students and researchers of public policy, public administration and public management.

The Italian welfare state in a European perspective
A comparative analysis
Edited by Ugo Ascoli, Marche Polytechnic University and Emmanuele Pavolini, Macerata University
This is the first English-language book to take a comparative look at the Italian welfare state as a whole since the 2008 economic crisis. It offers a rare overview and analysis of the Italian situation based on an in-depth study of the main social policy fields (including education, higher education and taxation policies) and a comparative perspective framing the Italian case within the European context.

Social policy review 27
Analysis and debate in social policy, 2015
Edited by Zoë Irving, University of York, Menno Fenger, Erasmus University Rotterdam and John Hudson, University of York
SPR 27 brings together international scholarship to address a broad range of issues that emphasise both the breadth of social policy analysis, and the expanse of issues with which it is engaged. These include the effects of financialisation on services and care provision, policies to address deficiencies in housing and labour markets and ways in which the study of social policy may need to develop.

White working class voices
Multiculturalism, community-building and change
Harris Beider, Coventry University
This important book provides the first substantial analysis of white working class perspectives on themes of multiculturalism and change in the UK, creating an opportunity for these ‘silent voices’ to be heard. Based on over 200 interviews in multiple sites the results are startling – challenging politicians, policy makers and researchers. Improving our understanding of how this group went from ‘hero to zero’, became framed as racist, resistant to change and disconnected from politics, the book suggests a new and progressive agenda for white working class communities to become a fully inclusive part of a modern and diverse country in the 21st century.

Vulnerability and young people
Care and social control in policy and practice
Kate Brown, University of York
Moves to assist or protect the vulnerable now play a crucial role in welfare and criminal justice processes. This distinctive book draws on in-depth research with marginalised young people and the professionals who support them to explore the implications of a ‘vulnerability zeitgeist’, asking how far the rise of vulnerability serves the interests of those who are most disadvantaged.

Trading time
Can exchange lead to social change?
Lee Gregory, University of Birmingham
As time banking receives increased attention from policy makers as a means for promoting welfare reform in the wake of austerity, this book is the first to look at the concept of time within social policy to examine time banking theory and practice. It will be valuable for academic researchers, the voluntary sectors and theoretical analysis of social policy and political ideologies.

Clear blue water?
The Conservative Party and the welfare state since 1940

Robert M. Page, University of Birmingham

Has the modern Conservative party developed a distinctive approach to the post-war welfare state? Written for a broad readership, the book takes an authoritative look at Conservative party policy and practice in the modern era. Its time-defined content and broad historical thread make it a valuable resource for academics and students in social policy and politics as well as social history.
